If you're using an earlier version of Adobe After Effects, this article may guide you in the right direction. You may want to read a couple of articles that focus on some of the newer features available in this release. Alternatively, it may give you the chance to identify what features you have currently installed. . A: In your edition, have you selected "Update" from your Creative Cloud "My Projects" view of the title bar? In other words, is that the title bar being greyed out? If you haven't just enabled the update there, you might have: 1) Enabled the latest CC update (somehow) and are still seeing the greyed-out title bar 2) Encountered some download issues (ie the update you think you're downloading is not the one you actually receive) Q: Pattern for storing and deploying "smart" links? In my application, I maintain a list of sections and each section has an id. When a user clicks a link in the user interface that takes them to another section, I just use the id of the section in my query string. So, for example, www.mysite.com/section1 and www.mysite.com/section2 are totally equivalent. Yet, www.mysite.com/section1?sectionId=3 might be a smart link that pulls the values for different strings into the query string, depending on other state that user is in, which allows them to get to the link faster by saving time in the URL. This works fine for me right now, but as my application grows I'm thinking of how I can restructure this to keep myself from working at odds with a design that I'm very happy with, but am questioning. My question is this, how would you do this for some of the more complex situations? First, I was thinking of putting a slug field in the
